Course Description

Theories of institutions have been at the core of the social and behavioral sciences throughout the 20th and early 21st century. The course introduces theories of institutions from across the social sciences. The material covered ranges from institutional theory's classical origins through to contemporary debates about the origins of institutional change. Among the main problems discussed are the relationship between social action and institutions, the origins of social order and change, the role of culture and norms in social organization, and the interplay between social power and institutions. While the course delves deeply into theoretical debates, students are encouraged to link theoretical positions to their ongoing empirical research projects. Corresponding to the field of institutional theory, the course is paradigmatically eclectic. It covers positions from a broad variety of theoretical and methodological perspectives, among them classical anthropology, institutional economics, historical political science, and organizational sociology.

Participation in the seminar

All participants will be expected to read all of the texts on the syllabus, take an active part in class discussions, give a brief presentation and prepare a term paper of 15–20 pages due on 15 February 2020. Term papers have to be handed in in two versions: an electronic version has to be uploaded to the Ilias platform; a printed version has to be handed in according to the regulations of the ISS.¹ Both versions have to include a signed declaration on plagiarism. For the term paper original research on literature, data, or archival material is required. Term papers have to be written in English.
